

Thrive is a critical space to discuss diverse perspectives and opinions regarding the central question facing argi-food systems: how can agriculture positively contribute to ecosystem management and poverty reduction?

wle.cgiar.org/thrive. Michael Victor, m.victor@cgiar.org

audiences

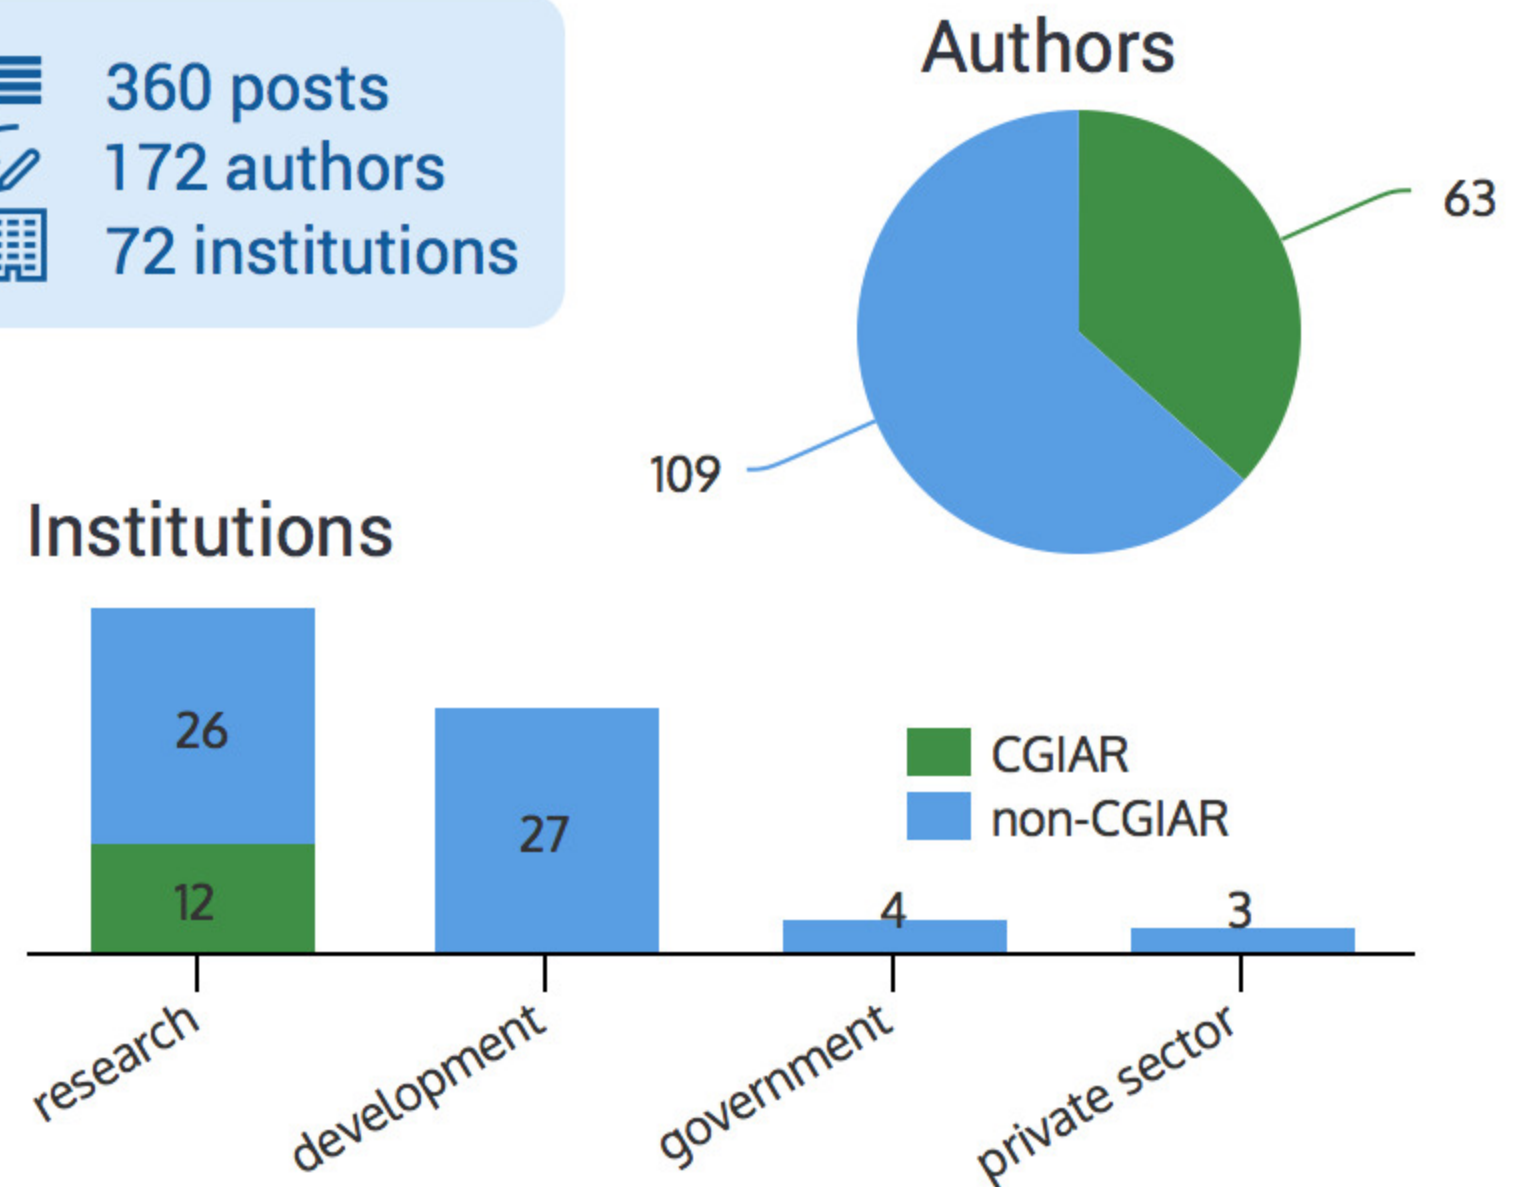

155,000 visitors
 280,000 page views
 720 comments

Audience geolocation, Jan 1, 2013-Jul 1, 2015

contributors

360 posts
 172 authors
 72 institutions

big questions

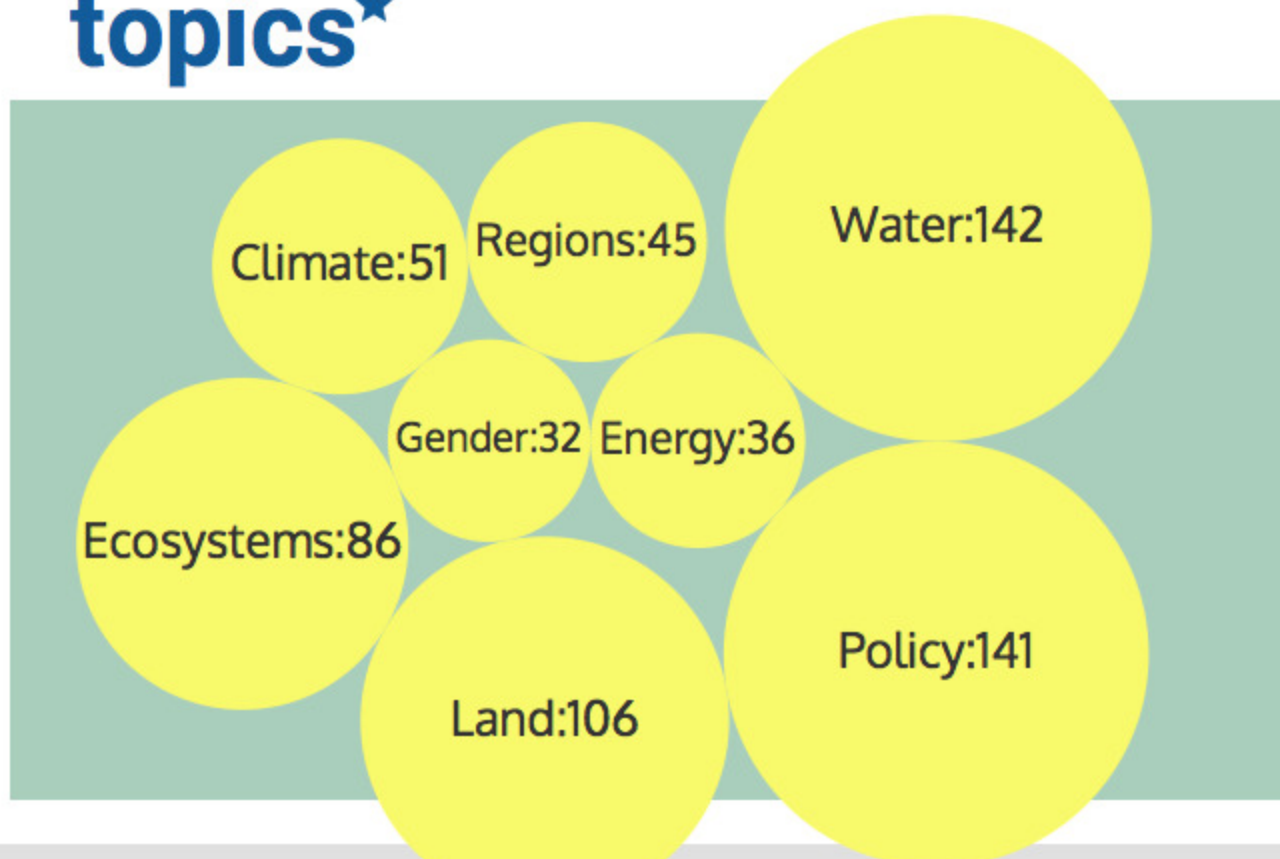

topical discussions on current issues

1. What would it take to strengthen women's land rights?
2. Sustainable intensification of agriculture: oxymoron or real deal?
3. Can Africa afford to save its soils?
4. Should we build more large dams?
5. Can large-scale land initiatives fulfill their promises?
6. Does farm size really matter in Africa?
7. Why focus on ecosystem services in rural communities?

monthly themes

	ecosystem services	land acquisition	resilience	restoring landscapes
posts	15	19	23	20
comments	50	16	30	34
visitors	5,258	5,831	10,700	9,441
page views	10,727	10,702	15,230	14,782

topics*

influence

- * The blog has been cited 39 times in books and peer-reviewed journals (source: google scholar) ★★
- * 8% of respondents to a poll said the blog had changed their opinion on a topic.

"I have had glowing remarks on THRIVE. The ecosystem service community of practice finds THRIVE to be a gem and increasingly the 'water cooler' of the community."
- Fabrice DeClerck, Bioversity International

★ Individual blog posts can relate to multiple topics
 ★★ https://scholar.google.com/scholar?q=wle.cgiar.org%2Fblogs%2F&btnG=&hl=en&as_sdt=0%2C5